

Robie, Dolliver win, Zullo King of Rednecks at Claremont

By Gary Dutton

CLAREMONT, NH—Max Dolliver earned his career-first Claremont Motorsports Park victory lap Friday, June 21. Sportsman Modified hot shoe Brian Robie won for the fourth week in a row and hometracker Jimmy Zullo ran the season's second Red Neck Enduro event like Pac Man on steroids.

Pure Stock kingpin Kyle Templeton scored his third feature win of the summer Friday, while Six-Shooter ace Jeremy Blood saw his six-race winning streak halted but still went home atop the points parade.

Mike Smith led the opening lap of the Pepsi Sportsman Modified main, giving way to points leader Brian Robie the second time around. Two-time track champ Dana Smith then moved up to battle for the deuce but, coming quickly, rookie Kyle Welch was soon in the mix too.

Welch, in only his second open-wheeler outing, rocketed by first one Smith and then the other and, on lap eight, was glued to Robie's bumper. The two would race under a blanket for most of the final 32 laps, with Robie winning the tire wear battle and the race, taking the checkers six lengths ahead of Welch.

As in his maiden Sportsman Modified voyage a week earlier, Welch was powerful in earning the runner-up hardware. Dana Smith, close behind, came home third.

Max Dolliver led all the way in the Casella Street Stock 30-lapper, becoming the division's fifth different feature winner this season. The Londonderry, N.H. ace never had it easy though. Chris Riendeau got up for second on lap six and the two ran glued together the rest of the way, trading paint but keeping it clean.

And while the younger Riendeau and Dolliver may have put on the best battle of the young season, the action was just as good behind them, where Dave Greenslit and Larry Riendeau went to war over third. Greenslit earned the night's bronze, allowing him to stay atop the points parade.

Kyle Templeton led early and often in the caution-free Pure Stock 25-lapper, taking the checkers ahead of rookie Bruce Adams to keep the points chase deadlocked. Chris Carver was third on the night, moving up one spot on the seasonal leader board.

Hometown pilot Jeremy Blood entered the seventh night of the season one of two drivers still undefeated in 2019 feature races. Friday night's humble pie express appeared in the person of Seabrook's Adam Knowles, who dominated the event to score his first-ever Thrasher Road victory ahead of fellow first-timers Shane Horvath and Katie Buxton.

Stew McCormack topped the visiting Northeast Classic Lites series main event. Derrick and Paul Marsan were second and third, while series kingpin Duane Skofield came home fourth.

With round two of the Red Neck Enduro Series taking the green three-across and eight rows deep, Jimmy Zullo wasted no time in getting to the front and leaving all comers far behind.

Round one victor Justin Harris dropped out early, and the event was red-flagged once and then later shortened to 40 laps because of the downpour. Those distractions mattered little though as, on this night, Zullo ran in a class of his own. Kyle Buck claimed the runner-up hardware, one spot ahead of JJ Hoyt. The Red Neckers will return for round three of the summer series on July 5.

Next Friday, June 28, all five weekly divisions will be in action at Claremont Motorsports Park. The event will also include special guests the NHMS Legends and Bandeleros.

Stanhope Shines at the Twin State Games

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, VT— The Twin State Games were played Saturday morning at the Maxfield Sports Complex in White River Junction, VT. The top seniors from Vermont and the top seniors from Division II, III, & IV from New Hampshire played each other in a doubleheader that officially ended the 2019 High School baseball season.

Derrick Stanhope was named the Twin State Games New Hampshire MVP, and a very successful conclusion to his high school career (Photos courtesy of Karen Stanhope).

Games, from B1

The lone area representative for New Hampshire was Stevens High School senior Derrick Stanhope. Stanhope was tabbed to start on the mound for New Hampshire against a formidable Vermont team that had swept the Granite Stater’s last year. He responded by pitching 3 innings of shutout baseball, allowing 2 hits, walking 1, and striking out 4 Vermont batters, allowing his teammates to jump out to a 3-0 lead. New Hampshire would go to win the opener 4-1, with Stanhope earning the win!

He started the 2nd game in left field, playing 4 innings and walking in his only at bat. Vermont was able to salvage a split on the day as they rolled to an 11-3 win in the night cap.

For his efforts in the opening game win, Stanhope was named the Twin State Games New Hampshire MVP, and a very successful conclusion to his high school career.

“Derrick pitched so well for us all spring, so it was an absolute pleasure to get to watch him take the mound one more time in his last High School game, pitching New Hampshire to a win, and earning a well-deserved MVP Award for New Hampshire,” said SHS Baseball Coach Paul Silva. “I will miss handing Derrick the baseball.”

Inspiration

Beyond Coexistence - No More Strangers

By Priscilla Hull

The next step in coexistence is the realization that in truth if we want to build a better world, we need to go beyond the recognition of differences and the ability of coexisting to the point of embracing the differences between all people. We can't just tolerate the difference, but we must embrace and understand the differences. We don't adapt the differences to our own living, but we can realize that when we embrace the differences, we are, in fact, incorporating them into our own lives and broadening our sphere of understanding.

At some point in our life, we must make a reasonable decision to accept others as they are. We can no more fit someone into our mold that we can fit ourselves into their mold. Therein lies the beauty of life. We recognize that every little, minuscule or great, difference we consciously accept leads us to a greater, more powerful person ourselves.

Like the men and women of old, we often fear people who are different from us. That is a natural reaction to our own insecurities. So many years ago, we did horrible things to people who didn't fit into our mold. We put them away into closed, dark buildings, pushed meals of gruel and dry bread through a slot on the door. Worse, we burned them at the stake, per Joan of Arc legend and reality. We did unspeakable cruel and inhumane things all in the name of purifying the human race. Now, we at least recognize that sometimes people need medical or psychological help and we don't try to fit them into a mold so that we'll all be the same.

I fear we're still a long way from acceptance in the true sense of the world. We accept that people are different, but we still don't want them as our neighbors, in a community, as a friend. We don't realize the value there can be in befriending a lonely person who lives a slightly different lifestyle. When we realize that value, we'll be making the world a kinder gentler place where each person is a valued member and contributor to the community of man.

There is a book that was initially published in 2013 by Brandon Stanton. It is pictures of the people of New York City. The title is Humans of New York. You can also now find it on Facebook and, I believe YouTube. Loving people, as I do, I find Stanton's and images an exciting and awesome idealistic picture of people in the microcosm of New York City as a cross section of the people of the world.

Check the variety and you'll see that all people are basically similar. A head, body, extremities and most surprisingly minds. It is the minds that make us unique. All the rest is just a covering. It is what distinguishes us from one another.

We need to move beyond coexistence to the practical view of acceptance. Then we will all become whole!

"You shall not oppress the stranger, since you know the feelings of a stranger, for you yourself were once a stranger in Egypt."
Exodus 23:9

3 Tips for Negotiating a Salary

Give them a range of options

Inflexibility when it comes to a salary negotiation is rarely a good idea, so you would be wise to present a range of a few thousand dollars in which your preferred salary lies, according to Glassdoor. If, for example, you want to make $55,000 per year at your new job, perhaps offering a range of $54,000 to $57,000 will give you the opportunity to make more or less what you hope for, but maybe a bit more as well.

Show your confidence, with help

Usually, these salary negotiations aren't done in person, and instead are done via email or telephone. According to The Muse, this gives you the opportunity to refer to notes - such as some important talking points or some carefully researched salary information about people in your field or with the exact position you're being offered - that help you feel a bit more confident in your approach.

Know what not to say

Finally, when dealing with a salary negotiation, it's important to know what kinds of things you can say that would end up being a negative, according to HR expert Liz Ryan, writing for Forbes. For example, saying why you need to make a certain amount (i.e. "I have a lot of expenses") is rarely a good idea, and so is saying that a number of other companies are also trying to hire you. This is also true of once again highlighting your qualifications, since they should already be well-acquainted with those standards, and that's why they're trying to hire you.

Mission Monarch: State of the Butterfly Working Woodlands Workshop in Woodstock, VT 5pm-8pm

Did you know populations of Vermont's state butterfly, the Monarch, have been declining dramatically over the last two decades? While conservation research has focused on this issue, there are still many unknowns in the ecology of this beautiful and tenacious species.

Join us for this workshop, brought to you by the National Park, Vermont Center for Ecosystems, and the Montreal Insectarium, and learn how you can get involved in documenting Monarch breeding this summer! The workshop will prepare you with everything you need to participate in the 2019 International Monarch Monitoring Blitz. From July 27th to August 4th, observers across the United States, Canada, and Mexico will be surveying milkweed plants in search of all life stages of Monarchs. Data will be collected by Mission Monarch and used to paint a better picture of Monarch populations.

André-Philippe Drapeau Picard from the Montreal Insectarium will lead a presentation on Monarch biology, their conservation status, and actions you can take to help them thrive. Then, head into the Park to survey milkweed plants and assess Woodstock's Monarch population! Data will be reported to Mission Monarch to contribute to the greater monitoring effort. You can then take your skills to your community and organize Monarch monitoring field trips during the International Monarch Monitoring Blitz! All ages welcome!

Co-sponsored by Vermont Coverts and the Vermont Woodlands Association.

Location: Forest Center, Marsh-Billings-Rockefeller NHP, Woodstock VT. Parking is available in the Billings Farm & Museum overflow lot, located on Old River Road.
